

Middle East Models

AI Overview

Middle Eastern models are reshaping global fashion, blending cultural heritage with international influence, from supermodels like Bella Hadid to emerging talents like Amira Al-Zuhair. Prominent Middle Eastern Models Bella Hadid (Palestinian-Dutch) is one of the most recognized supermodels worldwide, appearing in campaigns for Saint Laurent, Dior, Balenciaga, and Swarovski, and gracing numerous magazine covers. She has also launched her own brands, Kinfolk and Orebella, and is known for her activism on Palestinian issues. Gigi Hadid (Palestinian-Dutch) is another global icon, walking for luxury brands such as Versace, Chanel, and Balmain. She combines modeling with activism, business ventures, and motherhood, representing a modern blueprint for Arab supermodels. Imaan Hammam (Egyptian-Moroccan) has become a leading face in fashion, working with Bottega Veneta, Givenchy, Fendi, and Ralph Lauren. She advocates for inclusivity and celebrates her roots, inspiring young women globally. Shanina Shaik (Saudi-Pakistani) is known for her Victoria's Secret runway appearances and luxury campaigns, blending multicultural influences in her work. Nora Attal (British-Moroccan) has walked for Alexander McQueen, Prada, and Dior, establishing herself as a consistent presence on international runways. Rising Stars and Regional Influencers Amira Al-Zuhair (Saudi Arabia) began her career at 15 and has worked with Chanel, Prada, Elie Saab, and Dolce & Gabbana. She combines academic achievement with modeling, breaking stereotypes about Arab women. Azza Slimene (Tunisian) has walked for Chanel, Maison Rabih Kayrouz, and Yohji Yamamoto, while also engaging in humanitarian work as an ambassador for human rights and environmental causes. Lana (Palestinian-Syrian) has appeared in campaigns for Elle, Vogue, Burberry, and Calvin Klein, representing a fusion of tradition and modernity in her modeling approach. Habiba El Kobrossy (Egyptian) transitioned from Taekwondo to modeling, walking for Michael Cinco and Dior Men...
