AI Overview

The price of a complete circuit distribution box typically ranges from around $50 for basic residential units to over $2,000 for industrial-grade, fully equipped systems. Price Range Overview The cost of a distribution box depends heavily on material, internal components, and specifications. Basic plastic or ABS enclosures for residential use can start at approximately $50–$200, while powder-coated steel or stainless steel units with integrated circuit breakers, surge protectors, and busbars can range from $500 to $2,000 or more for commercial or industrial applications (NUOMAK). Customization and OEM Options: Custom busbar layouts, cable entry modifications, and branding can further increase costs (Made-in-China). Market Considerations Residential Units: Typically single-phase, simpler, and more affordable. Commercial/Industrial Units: Three-phase, higher durability, and often include advanced control systems. Installation Costs: Not included in the purchase price; professional installation is recommended for safety and compliance.
